GEN. D. McM. GREGG,

Nominated for Auditor-General by the Republic ans of Pennsylvania General David McMutrie M. Gregg, the Republican candidate for Auditor-general of Pennsylvania, is popularly known as the cavalry hero of Gettysburg. He was graduated from West Point in 1855, served in the campaigns against the Indians in Washington and Oregon in 1858-60, and in January, 1862, was made colonel of the Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry. He served with distinction throughout the war, being brevetted major-general of volunteers. He is looked upon as an independent man, and if elected will hold the office now occu-pied by Thomas M. McCamant, who is regarded as too strongly identified with the Bardsley scandal.

Kansas Political Wheel.

The political wheel has taken a somewhat nnusual turn in Kansas, where the Republicans and Democrats propose to "get to-gether" in the support of nominees for judicial offices. The experience which that State has had with the judges elected by the Alliance party last year has evidently caused the old parties to forget their prejudices. The figure which some of the new judges have cut in recent legal questions would certainly unite the old parties if anything could. Putting students upon the bench to decide intricate points of law would hardly be possible except in the case of a very tresh and innocent "reform"

Not Exactly Complimentary.

Here is a Georgia paper referring to the famous Alliance orator, Mrs. Lease, as a densely ignorant, gabbling female, whose rant is merely emitted for the sake of hearing her own rasping accents and seeing the reports of her barangues in print. And yet we are told that when the women all get into politics everything and everybody wil be serene, and lovely, and courteous!

There, Now!

IDEAL HOUSEKEEPING.

Miss Frances Willard Outdoes Bellamy in Her Visions of the Home of the Future.

Chicago Interview. "Ob, certainly, I believe we're going to have wonderful improvements in housekeeping in the future," remarked the noted temperance advocate, Miss Frances E. Willard, as she settled berself comfortably in ber rocking-chair and peered over her glasses with a ready-to-be-interviewed air.
"When some man with a brain, like a George M. Pullman or a Thomas Edison, takes hold of the problem I expect we shall be able to order or a real and the shall be a real and be able to order our dinner by telephone and have it delivered ready cooked and hot through a pneumatic tube. Then we shall have it served by a deft young man and eaten from delicately shaven wooden dishes that will be burned after using, thus saving all the trouble and labor of dishwashing.

"Do you believe in co-operative housekeeping?" "No. I do not. At least not in that kind of co-operation which provides a great pubto eat. I do not like the idea of herding together in boarding-houses and hotels. I believe the privacy of home life must be kept sacred. But I do not see why we cannot have a common, great kitchen from which all may order their food ready cooked. "I do not think that women will be the cooks of the future. The work is too hard for them. Their delicate complexions are not fitted to stand the heat of the stove over which they must bend when they cook. It is naturally a man's work. Vanderbilt's cook, in New York city, gets $10,000 a year, which is the same saiary as Why should not men do all the cooking, and make a great business of it? In the pioneer days of the world, when man got his living by hewing down the ferests, it was natural that woman should prepare food for him when he came home tired at night. But times have changed, and why should not the cooking of food become a great business interest now like so many other household industries? "Then there's the heating of our houses.

What a nuisance the furnace and coal bin is to the tidy housewife. Why not have a whole street full of houses, or at least a whole block, heated by steam sent out from a common boiler? I'm sure such a plan is practical, and I think there is one in use now at Lockport, N. Y. There is al-so such a scheme in use in Winona, Minn., where a whole block of private residences is heated with steam conveyed by pipes running underground from a neighboring

"But I also think," Miss Willard continued, "that improvements in rapid transit will have the effect of greatly changing our housekeeping plans. I do not believe we shall always ride in ponderous railroad trains, with their noise and soot, but some day every person will ride his own bieycle.
These machines will be made of the light alluminum metal, and will go skimming over the pavement more swiftly than the fast mail, and as quietly as a summer breeze. We shall have air bicycles and water bicyles then, and everybody will ride them. Our great hotels and restaurants will then be out in the suburbs, where most of our homes will be. When the lunch or dinner hour comes, instead of crowding into hot hotels and dingy, close restaurants, every body will start for the country. Some will speed silently along the streets, others will go whirling through the air, and others still will go swishing through the water. After an exhibarating ride of a few minutes they will sit down to a simple, hearty meal of country milk and butter, vegeta-bles and fruits, and will then return to their places of business in less time than it now takes them to get waited on at the Palmer House.

"Although we shall always do business in the cities, I think the homes of the people are going to gravitate more and more to the country. We shall then use less and less of meat and other stimulating foods and drinks, and more and more of fruits and vegetables. Why, last year the supply of fruit for food increased 10 per cent. over that of meat. And I think the increase is going on until all the poor people will eat fruit largely instead of meat, and will find it more cooling and healthful.

"All these wonderful inventions can and will be perfected," and here the speaker's bright face took on a look of tender earnestness, and her playful voice dropped to a tone of deep seriousness as she added; "When man's brain has become freed from the withering blight of alcohol and the stupefying fumes of tobacco, and woman is emancipated from trailing skirts and tight corsets, then, hand in hand, higher manhood and sweeter womanhood will make their home in the country, with easy access to the city, and all the world will live 'near to nature's heart."

LADY MANAGERS AND WOMEN ARTISTS Unkind Remarks About Some Peculiar Features of the World's Fair Management,

New York Commercial Advertiser. Mrs. Potter Palmer is lady president of something or other connected with that nondescript castle in Spain, the Chicago Columbus fair. Miss Ellen A. Ford is lady manager-at-large of this same something or other. This lady manager-at-large has received a pronunciamento from this lady president, beginning as follows:

"The Board of Lady Managers require an official seal, and invite the women designers of America to make competitive sketches suitable for this purpose. It was said of our respected but indiscreet first parents, when they were shown the door of Paradise, "The world was all before them, where to choose." Soit might be said of the Lady President that all the wealth of Chicago English lay spread out before her when she selected the word Lady with a big L as a characterization of her own little coterie and designated as women with a little w the designers of America of her own sex. The "women designers" of America are those of their sex with the genius to create beauty; while, so far as the public knows. the Board of Lady Managers may not even have the luck to possess it. Most assuredly not, if "pretty is as pretty does."

By scores, by hundreds and by thousands sensible men and women are now returning. weary and heavy laden, with the consciousness that they have eaten the dinners they ought not to have eaten and left untasted the sweet solitary and satisfying hie they should have led, and there is no rest in them. Our American life in that great middle class whose incomes run from $1,500 to $7,500 a year needs nothing so much as the resolute determination to lead simple lives. Within these modest limits, by book, by cast, by photograph and by music score—thanks to the vast cheapening of modern life, all that is hest and highest in the life of all time is today accessible. Cheap fares have brought sea and land within the reach of all. The simple life was never higher in flight or breader in range than to-day, and if the cottager has his-or, more often, her-woeful and wasteful will with the sweet simplicity of the seaside, it is, alas! alas! because too many of us would have it so.

Habits of Wild Ducks. Forest and Stream

At the period of incubation ducks make their nests whenever the desire to deposit the first egg comes upon them. If they have neglected to provide a suitable retreat, it is too late to mend matters. Since then I have passed and repassed the spot and have seen the eggs handled frequently, but for all that Madame Duck does not desert her rocky home.

Jock suggests that I go to his camp, three miles distant, for dinner. On the way we cross an immense marshy flat, and in the The philospher of the Milwaukee Jonr- middle of this is a beautiful spring, some nal says: "No woman can ever truly love eight yards in diameter. The water is SUNDAY JOURNAL. Mrs. Nellie Thomas, of Union City, who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. C. Smith, returned home Wednesday... Mrs. Visiting in Louisville... Father Ryves, of G. H. Stone is entertaining her sister, Mrs. St. Ann's, has gone on a three weeks' vaca-ally draped with aquatic mosses and algoso that it seems like looking down into fairyland. The waters of this spring run for a quarter of a mile and then sink to reappear a mile away, bursting into the creek from crevices in the volcanic rock. The swamp is a great breeding place for teal, and three or four ducks with their young broods are swimming in the miniature lake. As we burst upon the scene one duck thes off, but the rest stay to conceal their young. How do they do it? Bring them in to shallow water, where they can rest upon the bottom and stick their bills up through the moss. Then the old ones swim out into deep water and resort to the same tactics. We drive the ducklings from their place of concealment and they swim out to their parents with half of their bodies exposed. Though the moss is just as inviting they will not hide where they cannot feel bottom and their mothers bring them back to Young ducks can dive, but they have not the power of remaining beneath water for any length of time until they can make a strong flight. The power of remaining beneath the water is acquired by practice and is not innate.

THE "LADIES" TIME LOG." It Tells How Long It Ought to Take to Make Tailor Gowns.

New York Recorder. There are six hundred processes that may be gone through in the making of tailor dresses, and this schedule regulates the time that shall be aflowed for each item. it comes from England, the home of the tailor gown, and it allows for every article "a start" of a certain number of hours. Thus the plainest jacket or bodice has a start of twenty-eight hours, which, per-haps, does not seem anything out of the way. It is only when you come to the "extras" that you find that "breast and other cuts" may take up eighteen and a quarter more hours. Padding and stiffening in the shape of wadding and hair cloth, without which the best made jackets or bodice would not give much satisfaction, may monopolize twenty-six hours more, and five and three-quarters hours may in addition be consumed in the putting in of canvas. This gives only as yet a light total of seventy-eight hours. A great many more calculations are made for button-holes, buttons, hooks and eyes, bones, wings and back pieces, collars—there being twenty-seven and a half hours set down for the collar items-lapels, turns and revers, padding, extrasion sleeves, cutts, pockets and flaps, interlining, slits, plaits, tabs, side edges, basting and braiding, making in all

d total of 200 Rems. The compilers of the log go into all the intricacies of matching, shrinking, and stretching, frilling and puffing, serging, stitching, facing and the doing of such small miscellaneous things as putting shot in the bottom of a garment, or weights, or bangers, or loops inside it, or a stay in a waist, or a plain tab on a collar, or a staytape down the center of the back, or affixing labels. Like Shylock, they seem determined that everything shall be set down in the bond with the exact amount of time that it takes, which in some instances does not exceed a quarter of an hour. Much attention is devoted to the twenty-two different methods of fixing on furs, in which it would seem much art is required. Account is taken of costume dresses, rid-ng-habits, riding-trousers, riding-breeches. reindeer-skin breeches, pantaloons, pantaloon breeches, knickerbockers and knicker-bocker breeches, leggings, capes, hoods, Newmarket coats, ulsters, short and long dolmans, directoires, princess robes and For a plain ulster a start of 45% hours is lowed, and 37% hours for stated extras. The ulster with no seams below the hips starts two hours less than the one just mentioned; but the Newmarket coat has a start of two hours more. The princess robe, the polonaise and the long dolman start the same as the ulster, and the short dolman the same as the bodice, and there are numerous extras to all. The zouave jacket in its various forms runs into 41 hours; 21 hours are set down for capes, five for boods, 14 for quilting linings, 1612 for a plain vest, 18 for a loose-front vest, and 11 for a long one. Riding-trousers and ridingbreeches consume much time, and so do eggings and spats. The riding-skirt takes 2012 hours, and its tormenting extras 40

The basting of all these various articles as greatly exercised the minds of the compilers of the log, and they devote much space to it, overpowering one with proound classification of velvets, leathers, furs, cloths, silks, satins, cashmere stuffs, alpacas, cords, corduroys, faced goods, stockinets, serges, heavy milled Angolas, cheviots, Shetlands, Saxonys, friezes, vicunas, etc. Taken in its entirety, the ladies' time-log is a curiously interesting piece of work, and illustrates yet again the familiar truth that women, especially tailor-built women, are fearfully and wonderfully made, The log has been arranged, by the way, as the readjest means of settling disputes between tailors and their employes.

CHINA WAS LEADER. The Celestials Were the First Nation to In vent Coins.

Philadelphia Ledger. It is probable, though not definitely proven, that China was the first country to invent a system of coinage. Indeed, one well-shaped coin in the mint collection is said by Chinese scholars to belong to the time of Emperor Shun, B. C. 2654. This, bowever, is not vouched for by numismatic experts in this country. The Chinese cast their coins, and, in consequence, had numerous counterfeits, which can be detected by the file marks on the edges. Their ancient coins were of extremely curious shapes, and of all sizes and varieties. One copper coin is the exact counterpart in shape of a modern razor. The present comage of the country is round, with a hole in the center, which is supposed to represent

Old Japanese coins were of silver or gold and either oblong or oval in form. About 1872 the American system of coinage was introduced by Jusho Hirsbuino ltoto, and universally adopted. In addi-Japanese "yen" and "sen") the Japanese use mills ("rin"), which are of bronze and s half cent in value. The most ancient Japanese com in the collection is about three hundred years old. It is an obang. an oblong gold piece, the original value being $75. There are also several smaller pieces known as cobangs, also of gold. The Japanese of that period must have been systematically cheated by their government, as there is not more than 50 per cent. gold in the coins. The coins of the present date, however, contain 90 per cent., the
